The history of chemoinformatics is presented from its very beginning and outstanding "events" in computerization and information processing in the history of chemistry are highlighted. Crucial issues dealing with the essential steps of structure coding, storage and retrieval systems and data analysis are treated in depth as, from the very beginning, they have shaped all the new developments and methods in the field of chemoinformatics.